SUNY PROFESSOR TOOK BRIBES IN SEEDY CASH-TO-PASS SCHEME AND MAY SOON BE STUDYING THE INSIDE OF A JAIL: POLICE

A former professor at upstate SUNY Canton allegedly took money under the table to dole out higher grades to some of his students, state police said this week.

Rajiv Narula, 45, a former long-time chemistry professor on the St. Lawrence County campus, was hit with eight felony counts of third-degree bribery on Tuesday, nearly two years after the allegations surfaced, state troopers said in a press release.

Associate professor Rajiv Narula taught chemistry at SUNY Canton for 12 years before bribe allegations cost him his job.

Police said ex-professor Rajiv Narula took bribes from students in 2021 and 2022 in exchange for higher grades.

Narula was arraigned by Canton Town Justice Michael Morgan and released without bail pending a return court appearance on April 28, according to the release.

A spokesperson for the state-run university said Narula taught chemistry as an associate professor in the School of Science, Health and Criminal Justice from 2011 until he was fired in May 2023.

The rep declined to comment on the bribery case "because this is an ongoing investigation."

Investigators said the alleged cash-to-pass scheme took place during the 2021 fall and summer semesters and again during the 2022 spring semester, according to WWNY-TV News.

Ex-SUNY professor Rajiv Narula was charged with eight counts of felony bribery for allegedly selling higher grades.

School administrators turned the case over to the New York State Inspector General's Office, which turned the case over to police after concluding an investigation.
